Scarfield Wharf Stables

Scarfield Hill	B48 7SQ	Alvechurch	BDC ID	ALV001

Description / Summary

Stable building, probably built in 1861 after the 1847 wharf enlargement. A smaller building appears on the 1842 Tithe map, and this may be incorporated in the current building, but there are no obvious indications in the building fabric. Scarfield Wharf was originally constructed around 1806, following the construction of the canal stretch between Hopwood and Tardebigge, and included a winding hole, stables, machine house and weighbridge, the latter of which was taken from Hopwood Wharf. In 1808 the wharf was the southern terminus for a horse-drawn packet boat service, conveying goods and people between Alvechurch and Birmingham, although this enterprise only lasted 5 years. The stables likely used bricks from the then nearby Wynn's Brickworks, which operated from 1860-1939.

Age, Authenticity and Rarity

Mid-C19th with possible earlier parts incorporated. There are minimal signs of change to principal form and fabric since 1861, although windows and rainwater goods appear to be modern. The building is one of only a handful of surviving historic wharf buildings in the area.

Architectural Interest

Simple, utilitarian form with interesting brickwork.

Historic Interest

Historic association with the canal, particularly associated with Wynn's Brickworks as probable supplier for its principal fabric, and subsequent occupier as the brickworks leased the wharf for transporting its goods.

Townscape/Villagescape/Landscape Interest

Positive contribution to canal corridor, strengthening the line of the bridge and marking an intersection of travel modes.

New Alvechurch Marina Building
Scarfield Hill	B48 7SQ	Alvechurch	BDC ID ALV002

Description / Summary

Marina Offices and Chandlery, built in the 1980s-90s, to designs from local firm Frank Helm Associates.

Age, Authenticity and Rarity

Late C20th, but an authentic and unique design; possibly the only purpose-designed modern canal building in the area.

Architectural Interest

Unique, modern form appearing to reference the 'cloth and plank' cargo section of historic working canal boats. The building is designed specifically for visual interest as opposed to a utilitarian 'shed'.

Historic Interest

The conversion of the wharf from industrial use to leisure use was a key moment in its history and ensured its ongoing survival as a piece of canal infrastructure. The Marina building has been the hub of local canal life for over 40 years.

Townscape/Villagescape/Landscape Interest

Positive contribution to canal corridor, modern but not jarring or harmful.

Architectural Interest

Historic Interest

Original two dwelling occupied by John Wareing in 1842 with wife and three sons, he was a 'Canal Labourer' and two of his sons were needle-makers. Connection with both canal and needle-making is important to the area; it is not clear if the house itself hosted cottage industry needle making.

Townscape/Villagescape/Landscape Interest

Positive contribution to reservoir and canalside landscape; unusual interjection sitting in lowland adjacent to embanked, raised canal.

Description / Summary
	5	•	ely rebuilt, two are in the process ssion for residential conversion.
Age, Authenticity and Rarity

Assumed early C19th original; substantially rebuilt in 1858 (date stone), including farmhouse, but probably retained some parts of original outbuildings. Farmhouse is modernised but retains overall form; three-storey height is rare. Rear workshop has unusual industrial character, rare in area. The two barns to the east were recently demolished rather than converted, although clearly modern, the form of the originals has been retained, maintaining the layout legibility of the original farmstead. The imposing C19th barn to the front of the site and adjacent cow shed have been retained although are in the process of being converted.

Architectural Interest

Three storey, three bay painted brick farmhouse with clay tiled, gabled roof with brick end stacks. Windows are all modern, with segmental arches, and central door has later porch on brick pillars. Rear workshop has large, multipane metal windows at ground and first floor, with timber shuttered openings to the centre, all under polychromatic, segmental arches.

Hopwood House Inn
Birmingham Road	B48 7AB	Hopwood	BDC ID ALV065
Description / Summary

C19th public house associated with development of Hopwood Wharf.

Age, Authenticity and Rarity

Built in 1867, the building has been substantially extended to the south and west, although its principal canal-facing façade remains legible.

Architectural Interest

Simple, gabled rectangle form, with 2/2 sash windows and flat, rubbed brick arches and two canted bays to the ground floor. The roof ridge has decorative crest tiles, but these may be replicas as the main roof slates are not original.

Historic Interest

Historic communal importance to village and to the development of the canal and its users.

Townscape/Villagescape/Landscape Interest

Forms gateway with cottages opposite, marking location of canal/road intersection and the beginning of the southern portion of the village.

Wast Hills House
Wast Hills Lane	B38 9ET	Alvechurch	BDC ID ALV066
Description / Summary
Early C20th mansion built	for W.A. Cadbury.
Age, Authenticity and Rari	ty

Built in 1905, the building has been altered and adapted but its overall form and character remain. Rare for its size and period.

Architectural Interest

Designed by Arthur E. McKewan, with a matching lodge adjacent to the access. The house is of roughcast over brick with sandstone dressings, diamond patterned gables and green slate roofs, rather like over-scaled Voysey. It has two storeys with attic and a spinal corridor to each floor with rooms at either side. The entrance front has a series of three gables at left and the single-storey service court at right. The fenestration is of two and three-light casements with stone surrounds and there are inserted C20th windows to the first floor. The doorway is at far left. It has a cambered arch with a keystone and to the immediate right of this there is a datestone which is inscribed "C / WA+EH / 1905". To right of this are two conjoined gables, the left hand one of which has a projecting C20th extension to the present dining room with a flat roof at ground floor level with four-light window. The kitchen court has a hipped roof with a louvred bellcote. The entrance hall has an inglenook fireplace with oak panelling, polychromatic tiling and a copper hood to the fire and fixed benches. There are stained glass windows to the inglenook showing a ship [probably of 1930s date] and to the heads of the basket-arched lights of the screen which divides the entrance lobby from the seating area. A broad spinal corridor at ground floor level has slender vertical panels to the walls which extend up to a plate rack and have niches with hood moulds and projecting shelves with brackets. The entrance hall staircase is of open-well design. The newel posts are of square section with carved foliage to the corners and caps. The study has fitted shelves, drawers and cupboards of mahogany. The mezzanine landing of the later [1910] staircase, at west, has a mullioned and transomed window of three lights including panels of Pre-Raphaelite-influenced design. Several of the ceilings at ground floor and first floor levels have panels with foliage in relief.

Historic Interest

Built for William Adlington Cadbury of the prominent local Quaker family. It was initially intended as a summer house for the family, who continued to also live at Edgbaston. Improvements in the roads between Wast Hills and Bournville and the purchase of a motor car made it possible to live at Wast Hills all year round and additions were built in 1910, also by McKewan. The Cadbury family gave the house to the University of Birmingham in 1968 and it was used as a conference centre until shortly before 2007.

Despite its size, the dwelling is well concealed from public view, nevertheless it makes a positive contribution to the landscape as a landmark building.

C18th hall and its former gardens and park.

Age, Authenticity and Rarity

C18th hall with possible earlier origins for the original park. The hall was heavily modified, extended and its immediate setting developed in the C20th, however much of this has now been removed to make way for a residential development.

Architectural Interest

The southeast elevation is of most interest and comprises two storeys divided into five bays, with a projecting central bay with entrance portico under, it appears, a copper roof. First floor windows are 8/12 horned timber sashes and ground floor 12/12 to match. There are stone details such as a square string course and moulded cornice, but most detailing is lost due to the fact the building has been roughcast rendered. A raised forecourt is laid out in front of this elevation, from which there are restricted, but still available in glimpses, views out across the landscape, including the hall's former parkland and beyond.

Historic Interest

The hall's origins are associated with Lord Foley, and the land is thought to have originally been part of Bordesley Abbey's estate, sold to Edward Lord Windsor in the sixteenth century, following the Dissolution. A number of associated farmhouses and barns in the area also add to the historic group value of the Bordesley estate.

Townscape/Villagescape/Landscape Interest

The landscaped park has been eroded and subdivided and a tree belt south of the Hall now obscures much of the view to and from the Hall and its former parkland landscape, however views to the southeast remain possible, particularly in winter months when the deciduous trees shed their leaves. Despite erosion, there remain untouched pockets of the nineteenth century parkland, visible from the site and identifiable in aerial photography. This includes small stands of trees, ponds, boundary positions and the scar of one of the historic footpaths through the park.
